

Dr Cooper: You know what I hate, baby?

Christina: What?

Dr Cooper: Well, I don't hate it, but you know there are some people who get a lot of compliments because they're really rich, or super good looking or something, and everybody's always compliment ... or maybe they're somebody's boss, and everybody's always giving them compliments.

Christina: You mean kissing their ass?

Dr Cooper: Yeah, kissing their ass. And you know, I have some friends like that. I don't know if you noticed, but I like to say ... sometimes I say good things about myself. Sometimes I brag.

Christina: Not sometimes, you always brag about yourself.

Dr Cooper: Well, and okay. I always brag about myself.

Christina: Because you're conceited.

Dr Cooper: Okay. I'm conceited, but look, so I say good things about myself. I compliment myself.

Christina: A lot, yes.

Dr Cooper: And then my friends, these friends sometimes have friends who everybody kisses their ass, because they're rich, or they're famous, or they're good looking or something.

Christina: Wait, so do you want ... are you saying that you want other people to start complimenting you?

Dr Cooper: Exactly. I mean, they criticize me for saying good things about myself, for bragging. If I got complimented all the time, I wouldn't have to brag. What do you think about that? Is that a good point?

Christina: I think that's a very silly point.

Dr Cooper: You think that's silly?

Christina: Yeah.

Dr Cooper: Why?

Christina: It's just silly.
